KNOWING HOW TO ADVERTISE

To a great many business men advertising their business is taking chance, but to others it is an investment that gives immediate returns. To men like John Wanamaker who makes a contract for a quarter of a million dollars worth of space at a time it is creating new business and maintaining the old. He has just taken a page three times a week in the Paris edition of the New York Herald, which arouses Paris as an American pace in business such as they never before witnessed and which they must follow or fall to the rear. The way to move goods fast is to let those who need them know that you have them and want them to move quick at bargain profits.

A bargain price does not mean a sacrifice price, but a price satisfactory to buyer and seller. Waiting for big profits is the way to slow gains in trade. It is quick sales and small profits that make stocks of goods roll out and stocks roll in-that boost the aggregate of each year's business. Goods move quickest on lubricated ways.
